Welcome to the first-annual Trashion Revolution, a fashion show to raise awareness of plastic pollution, climate change, racial justice and gender equity. 35 designers are creating "trash art" looks made primarily from single-use, disposable, post-consumer plastic, and 50 models will walk the runway who represent age diversity (age range 15-79), body diversity, racial diversity (66% identify as BIPOC) and gender diversity (40% identify as TNB/trans and nonbinary).

Trashion Revolution is also a competition, where designers will compete for $2000 in prize money for the top five designs judged by our crowd and our esteemed panel of judges.

A long, elegant hallway with a polished marble floor. On the left, a series of white, fluted columns with dark, ornate capitals line the wall. A glass door is visible between the first two columns. The ceiling is white with recessed lighting and several large, multi-tiered crystal chandeliers hanging from it. The hallway leads to a darker area at the end, possibly a stage or another room. The overall atmosphere is classic and sophisticated.
